

FAQ

WHAT ARE THESE?

These are called blockprints - woodcuts and linocuts (also known as linoleum blockprints).

WHAT'S A LINOCUT and A WOODCUT?

A woodcut/linocut is a way of creating art by first carving an image out of wood or linoleum (not the vinyl of today but cork, wood pulp, and linseed oil, compressed and held together with burlap). The carved image has to be inked using a brayer (roller), paper is then placed on the surface, and then hand-cranked through a press or hand-burnished with a flat object such as the back of a wooden spoon. This has to be done every time for each image and color made.

ARE THESE STAMPS?

No. Like a stamp, they're relief prints; meaning the surface gets printed. Unlike stamps, they're not made of rubber from a mold, but are carved into a harder material and require much more pressure to get the image.

WHAT'S AN ORIGINAL PRINT?

An original print is an image made directly from a plate that the artist has carved or etched. Unlike a Giclee reproduction (which is an inkjet copy), the original print is the actual intended art - the artist has just chosen this method instead of a paint brush, pencil, etc., to make the piece.

HOW LONG DOES IT TAKE YOU TO CARVE A BLOCK?

That all depends on the detail and size. I work fairly quick and have done smaller blocks - 3"x2" - in a few hours, while my biggest block - 5'x3' - took me 2 months to carve.

HOW DO YOU GET DIFFERENT COLORS?

Different colors are achieved by carving multiple blocks. These have to be inked separately, and pressed separately, one color on top of another. In addition, I hand-paint with watercolor some of the prints.

This is also why the prints are priced differently - it takes a two-block print twice as long to make as a single-block print. The more color you see, the higher the cost of the work.

DO YOU MAKE YOUR OWN FRAMES?

Yes. My frames are an 8 to 10 coat process I developed. I also do my own mats using the blockprint method.

WHAT DO THE NUMBERS MEAN AT THE BOTTOM OF THE IMAGE?

The numbers indicate the size of the edition (how many pictures were made) and how far along in the edition before being sold out.

For example: 73/100 The number on the right is the edition size - 100 were made. The number on the left, 73 lets you know there are approximately 27 prints left before the edition sells out. My largest editions are 250, my smallest 15.

DO YOU HAVE DEALS FOR MULTIPLE PURCHASES?

No. My work is not mass produced and is fairly priced for the time that goes into a handmade product. Since we're cutting out the middle man (the gallery), I'm able to sell for less by doing the selling myself. Despite the rising costs of booth fees, materials, gas, and hotels, my prices have remained the same since I began doing art fairs full time in 2003. It's my desire to hold to these prices as long as I can - each year being a better deal for the customer. However, I can't guarantee this and in the future may have to raise them. It's important to me that anyone who wants my work can afford it.

ARE YOU A MUSICIAN?

No. I've dabbled with piano, trumpet, and harmonica, but I don't consider myself a musician. Music has been a big part of my life, however, and I consider it the perfect marriage to be able to make art and listen to music at the same time. I listen to all types of music and have no individual favorites - the genres I listen to seem to change with my moods and the locations I'm in.

DO YOU DO SPECIAL REQUESTS?

I've kept my music choices almost exclusively to the legends (Hall of Fame). I do commissions, but due to the lengthy process of creating a block for a single image, the cost is much higher than what you would pay for what's already being offered. CD commissions start at $600.

Statement:

Initially trained as a painter (BA and MA), I first became interested in relief blockprints when I discovered the woodcut novels of printmakers Lynd Ward and Frans Masereel. The strong graphic contrasts of light and shadow, and black and white, seemed to appeal to my aesthetic senses. I quickly delved into the work of the German Expressionists and Mexican Socialists, and perhaps have been influenced in some way by all.

My blockprints are carved out of wood or linoleum - a compression of cork, wood pulp, and linseed oil. I print each block on an obsolete Showcard sign press, and the larger prints I burnish by hand. The choice of paper and cutting style are important in trying to create the correct feel for the subject matter.

My ideas are a result of my interests in narrative; story, poetry, lyric, and personal experience.

Music Series:

The narrative aspect of lyrics was a natural progression for me in developing artistic ideas. The blues legend, Robert Johnson, became an early study in Faustian narrative myth, while many other musicians had their own unique stories to tell. From there, it was simply the beginning of a series, or cycle of prints. I've worked in this method for the past 20 years as it allows me the opportunity to fully exhaust my ideas and flesh out the subject matter. I enjoy researching the history of the blues, country, jazz, and Americana, while the rock series is deeply imbedded in personal experience.

It was with purpose I created my small images the same size as a CD cover, the round images the same as a 45 record, the mat similar in size to an album cover, and the medium size prints scaled to resemble old music posters. The print bin creates the same recollection of browsing through albums in a record store. It's been my intention to foster a nostalgia or retro experience, while still making the art uniquely my own.

Method:

1) I begin each idea for a blockprint with a small thumbnail sketch. A final draft is then drawn to scale and transferred to the block. The drawing on the block is backwards as the eventual print will be the mirror image.

2) After the drawing is transferred, the block is carved using several V and U shaped gouges. There are a number of strategies when trying to break down an image into just black and white, but in the end, whatever is cut away will be white while the surface of the block will print black (or another color of choice).

3) Once the block is carved, the surface is inked, a paper is chosen, and then both are hand-cranked through the press. The blocks that are too large for the press are burnished on the back using a large wooden spoon."

4) Each multi-colored print has an individual block carved for every color. The print must align with the previous image and be pulled through the press multiple times. In addition, some of the prints are individually painted using watercolors.

5) The final print is then signed and numbered in a limited edition.
